DETAILED ACTION

Response to Arguments

1. Applicant's arguments with respect to claims 3-6, 9-12 and 15-18 have been considered but are moot in view of the new ground(s) of rejection.

Claim Rejections - 35 USC § 103

2. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

3. Claim 3 is rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Muratani et al, U.S Patent No. 6,061,451 in view of Serbinis et al, U.S. Patent No. 6,314,425 B1

As per Claims 3, 5, 9, 11, 15 and 17, Muratani et al disclose a method for copy protection for content comprising:

- descrambling the content delivered by a content provider using a local key (Col. 13 line 64-Col. 14 line 15)
- generating the local key (scramble key) from a user key stored in the IC card (Col. 14, lines 9-15).

Muratani et al, however, fail to explicitly disclose generating the local key from a user key as well as an authorization code provided by the content provider and receiving the authorization code via a communication channel. Serbinis et al disclose the use of access tokens to access protected documents and teach the use of a well known symmetric encryption technique wherein session keys are used both to encrypt and decrypt information. Serbinis et al disclose that session keys may be generated using unique information such as User ID (user key) data and optionally session specific information provided by the user or originator such as a password or code (Col. 12, lines 8-21). An authorized user attempting to retrieve the file must also provide the same information to permit regeneration of the session key and use the session key to decrypt data that was encrypted with the session key. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of applicant's invention to modify the method of Muratani et al and include any information (authorization passwords, codes, PIN, etc.) necessary to generate a local key or session key as is known in the art. It is also well known to provide authorization codes, passwords, PINs, etc. through a communication channel such as a telephone connection or a network. One would have been motivated to use authorization codes, passwords or any other information in generating the local key in order to provide the maximum amount of security to ensure that no other party can determine the session key and gain access to encrypted information.

As per Claims 4, 6, 10, 12, 16 and 18, Muratani et al and Serbinis et al fail to disclose receiving the user key from the content provider via the communication channel or embedding the user key in a medium embodying the content, however, this is also a well known feature in the art. Applicant's own specification admits that delivering keys to a user conditional access (CA) device using messages is known in the art (Page 2, lines 18-24). Delivering keys to user through a medium that also embodies content such as a CD ROM is also known in the art. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art at the time of applicant's invention to modify the methods of Muratani et al and Serbinis et al and include providing the user key through a communication channel or other medium as is well known in the art in order to provide secure content to a user.

Conclusion

4. Examiner's Note: Examiner has cited particular columns and line numbers in the references as applied to the claims below for the convenience of the applicant. Although the specified citations are representative of the teachings in the art and are applied to the specific limitations within the individual claim, other passages and figures may apply as well. It is respectfully requested from the applicant, in preparing the responses, to fully consider the references in entirety as potentially teaching all or part of the claimed invention, as well as the context of the passage as taught by the prior art or disclosed by the examiner.

5. The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.

- Matyas et al disclose a method for protecting software using cryptography and teach wherein the encrypted information is decrypted with a unique file key that is generated using an authorization number as well as a password provided to the user over a telephone connection.
- Hasebe et al discloses a method for protection of encrypted electronic data and teach wherein a decrypting key is generated according to a users personal number.
- Richards discloses a restricted access television system for protecting television signals from unauthorized users and teach decrypting content based upon a customer code and further teach transmitting user keys to users using a communication channel.
- Wasilewski et al disclose authorization of services in a conditional access system and teach decrypting content based upon a user's private key as well as other keys transmitted in control words.
